1. Guerrillas captured by the Greek Army and forced recruits who escaped from Markos' forces at the end of November have reported that in the area of Sukth, Albania, right-wing Partisans called "Ballists" were operating in strength.
2. Two forced recruits who were wounded during the Grammos Operations and later kept in the large convalescent camp at Sukth for several weeks stated that, while there in the middle of November 1948, they had heard that the camp was to be moved as "the area is unsafe due to the activity of Ballists."
